On October 27, 2011, the Homer Partnership (Families First) Leadership Team convened to learn, connect, and begin building the foundation for the Strengthening Families work ahead. In a session facilitated by Charlie Johanson-Adams, coach for the Homer team, participants engaged in identifying their assets, developed a merged vision, and explored their share core values.

A process was outlined beginning with the completion of the Strengthening Families Self-Assessment and Implementation Plan (due by Thanksgiving), and coaching steps to support the follow up plan.

On October 28th and 29th, members of the partnership and community members were trained in Stronger Together (see notes beginning on page 4).

Anchorage Training
November 1-2, 2011
Three individual programs were selected as Strengthening Families sites:

- Bright Horizons Birth to Five Child Care Program, Anchorage
- Camp Fire: Three before/after school programs, Anchorage
- Rock of Ages Birth to Five Child Care Program, Wasilla

The Leadership Team members of each of these programs met previously for the orientation and leadership training with their coaches, Sheila Wray and Monica Luther. Each program designed their vision and explored their core values and are in the process of submitting them.

Combined, the programs determined their working agreements, identified their team leads, and began completing the Self-Assessment and Implementation Plan.

Shared Power

What we do now?

- Teaching clients their R&R’s
- Show accountability
- Promote self-sufficiency
- Show that we are family based
- The ability to administer review or fair hearing
  - Parents have options when they feel unheard
- Show awareness – we are interested!
- Implement consistency on procedures
- Ask questions: what does a client need to maintain self-sufficiency?
- Show trust: we are on their side
- Encourage growth and support
- Lessen hand holding

Family Driven

- Asking parents’ opinion:
  - Suggestion box
  - Questionnaire
  - Parent teacher conferences
- Family based activities
- Family driven community café
  - Dinners
- Ask children what they would like to do
Parental Resilience

Parent
- Open-minded, take time for yourself
- Building trust in family members and self by using games and storytelling
- Teach children and family to be open and understanding within the homes
- Talk openly with my family (spouse) about what is going on within our home. Make a comfortable environment
- Give my child something I don’t let them play with to show them I trust them with it. Give them a job I trust them with.
- Take deep breath during crisis.
- This too shall pass!
- Take time outs for self
- Ask for help

Direct Service
- Provide support to help parents receive time away from children in order to regroup or have down time

Referral service
- Connect parents and care providers with experts
- Create workshop/training to teach best practices/strategies to improve resilience
- Identify an state issues
- Brainstorm to find answers (see “concrete supports in times of need”)

Strategies for Dismantling Bias

This exercise demonstrates that we live in a climate where stereotype and bias are embedded in the fabric of our communities. While uncomfortable, it will open a dialogue on the concepts of internalized oppression, fabric oppression, and covert vs. overt forms of oppression. It is important to extend the discussion to include the impact of stereotype and bias on the lives of children and families.

Stereotype and bias exists despite the fact that most people don’t openly profess the belief in stereotypes. When asked to list all the stereotypes that we know, lists typically fill up quickly. This exercise brings to the surface the many myths and biases that are commonplace in mainstream society. It opens a discussion of where messages originate, how they are passed on, and how they can be transformed. That is the key question for educators: what is our role in transforming the stereotypes and bias that exist in our society and profoundly affect the children in our care?
To identify the holes in our curriculum
Seek out additional training
Look for the bias in all of our classroom material, where are we missing multi-cultural materials
Use the things about bias to learn about bias, think about how are you actively teaching?
NAEYC website has excellent resources
Materials bias, look for it - than censoring
Curriculum and age groupings
Continuing to advocate to agency wide advocacy program
Create and mentor around cultural exposure, holiday celebrations
Educating and celebrating - the bias “CELEBRATE BY JULIE BISSON”
Lack of education can be a bias
Helping the staff coach the dialogue
How do we intervene and how do teachers feel confident in intervention
Address when we hear and see it – calling each other out first
Giving a safe place to speak out
Getting to know our staff in a better way – during staff meetings – asking at a deeper level about the staff’s bias and culture
Long-term / forever work, developing a more thoughtful process, make a committee or establish as a meeting norm, an article that looks at this issue, it is ongoing work.

Team trainers get together and help trainers to embed into their training are we embedding this into our daily life?
Understand the way in which we work with children. Instead of dealing with kids, mediating how the children respect. Rather than help children allow them to explore.
“fill the bucket” – Everybody has their own buckets.
Super Friends book, on friendship.
Listen to their communication, get into their free play time,
Do deal with children, get down there and mediate the children.
If you hear the children talking in this way, talk to the parent about this. We are conveying bias all the time
NOTICE the play environment and how it promotes our dialogue
- Educate individuals on how the terms impact your life. Call it.
- Have a child of each race “know” a child to be open and comfortable to the world
- Intentionally look at your curriculum
- Stand up and expose the language being used. “What does that mean?”

- Name it.
- Anti-bias curriculum is excellent to gain a different experience (Steve is seeking videos that help his community)
- Babies, self-study and film
